One of my favorite things about working on a project is having the opportunity to work with a variety of people. With that comes an "encyclopedia" of experiences, ideas, skills, and personalities who somehow all gel into making up a team. The part I always strive to take away is to learn something from every person on the team.

Here are a few of the things I learned and appreciate about working with each of you:

- ◆ Your attention to safety – your work is both physical and can be dangerous; however, you have a built-in expectation for safety and you also watch out for other contractors working with and around you;
- ◆ Your flexibility in scheduling, in working to ensure other contractors to have smooth work flow;
- ◆ Your flexibility in planning, working with engineering, and working with us on all of the projects to meet our schedules (on all of them!)
- ◆ Your great attitudes – you all have a "can do" attitude when given a challenge (and you were given more than one);
- ◆ Your teamwork in working with each other – you are a very productive drilling team;
- ◆ Your attention to quality – you want to make sure that the piles are done right!

I'm looking forward to working with you again on another project. I will specifically ask for this team of folks on any job that Berkel has part of the scope of work.

Sincerely,

Sally Cook
